Emory University is more than your typical liberal arts school. Our academic approach combines interdisciplinary views, hands-on experience, and a vast network of research resources. Classes are intimate (most under 30 students) and taught by renowned scholars who enjoy teaching and encourage inquiry.

First-year students choose to enroll at one of two locations for their first two years of study. Emory College is located in Atlanta, the #1 top US city for new graduates (Forbes), and is a four-year undergraduate school on a residential city campus. Emory College offers a rigorous liberal arts education supported by the research opportunities you’d expect from a major research university. Oxford College, 45 minutes east of the city, offers the same innovative curriculum in a more traditional liberal arts setting, along with many leadership and community involvement opportunities.

As juniors, all Oxford students continue to the Atlanta campus. Regardless of location, Emory students can customize their education, choosing from 70+ majors, 50+ minors, and a variety of preprofessional programs. Forty-seven percent of students work on research with a professor, and 37% participate in learning abroad. After their first two years, students interested in business or nursing can apply to Emory’s Goizueta Business School or the School of Nursing to finish their degree.

At Emory University, students are encouraged to participate in the challenging academic environment and vibrant social community. As graduates, they will possess broad knowledge, experience across disciplines, and hands-on leadership and research experience, making them prepared and in demand for graduate school, professional school or employment.

Admission and Aid

Emory University’s undergraduate programs are underscored by a commitment to a liberal arts education that emphasizes academic rigor. The University seeks students who have met the high standards of an academically challenging program. A holistic review of each applicant helps the Admission Committee understand and appreciate the many facets each student presents, including exemplary academic performance, special talents, extracurricular involvement, and interests.

The Admission Committee also recognizes the many variations in high school grading systems and the opportunities that schools can provide their students. Even though each applicant is considered within the context of the total applicant pool, the committee gives special attention to the individual’s academic record, especially weighting the difficulty of the curriculum. Standardized test scores and recommendations are also considered.

The Admission Committee hopes the following information will enable those involved in the college search to better understand Emory’s selection process. Further details on application requirements can be found at apply.emory.edu.

New at Oxford College

- Oxford Organic Farm opened on campus and allows students to learn about organic farming. The farm is part of a growing community-sponsored agriculture (CSA) subscription, and the food is being used in campus dining facilities as well. Several classes are offered in partnership with the farm, such as The Sociology of Food.
- Fleming Hall, a new residence hall, opened this fall, completing the plan to build 3 new halls off of the Quad over the last 5 years.
- Men’s soccer returns and will be played at the intercollegiate competitive level. In addition, golf and cross country teams for both men and women begin their inaugural seasons.
- Construction is underway on a new science building on the northwest corner of the Quad. Completion of the 57,500-square-foot facility is expected in the fall of 2015.
